With the rapid development of online communities, it's much easier than before to find someone we want in a short time. All we need to do is just ___56___ online, upload his or her picture, and provide information about his or her background. Then we won't have much trouble ___57___ the identity of that target person. That's because the powerful search engines can make it possible to track down that person through the "footprints" he or she left on the Net, such as birthday, images, or friends. Such ways of searching are known ___58___ "human flesh search." Those netizens who carry out human flesh search might be more efficient than ___59___ FBI agent could possibly be. For example, one man was ___60___ a dog, and his cruel behavior was recorded and uploaded online. As the film was posted and shared online quickly, it triggered the anger of the netizens. ___61___ the man to justice, netizens spent just 18 hours collecting sufficient information about the guy and reported him to Animal Rescue Team Taiwan, which forced the bad guy to apologize publicly.

However, whether this way of searching is right ___62___ debatable. In the U.S., a girl became the target of the bullying not only at school but also on the Web. Even though she changed her screen name and deleted her Facebook account, those cyber-bullies still found the poor girl through different social media sites. After ___63___ over the Internet for months, the girl couldn't stand the torture and committed suicide to end her misery. What a tragedy! Therefore, it is advisable that anyone who wants to carry out human flesh search in the name of justice ___64___ twice.

For a senior high school student in Taiwan, going to school is never an easy task. 65 he is interested in, he has no choice but to take all courses required. When going to school means coping with 66 pressure from schoolwork, students tend to see what they have to do as boring and avoid doing it, especially when they think what they learn can't 67 immediately in their real life. Some hardworking students may follow their schedules and keep themselves 68. However, some students who don't have specific goals in life may idle their days away and procrastinate studying for tests until the last moment. It doesn't mean that those students are all lazy and irresponsible for what they have to do. 69, some studies show that many procrastinators are actually perfectionists. They hope to do things well enough to prove they are capable but worry that their performance will never be as good as it should be, which may disappoint their parents and themselves. Therefore, they get into the habit of procrastinating. For them, 70, it is more bearable to be criticized as disorganized than to be defined as incapable. In other words, it is 71 everything perfectly that they become chronic procrastinators.

V. Reading Comprehension 4%

Facebook's "like" feature has been around for some time, and now there is talk of a "dislike" button, or at least an alternative to just "like", to be introduced.

"Over the years, people are asking for this. What we kind of have come to understand is that people aren't looking for an ability to down vote other people's posts. Instead, what they really want is to be able to express empathy," Zuckerberg said. "Not every moment is a good moment and if you are sharing something that is sad, whether it's something in current events, like the refugees crisis that touches you or if a family member passed away, then it may not feel comfortable to 'like' that post. But your friends and people want to be able to express that they understand and that they relate to you, so I do think it's important to give people more options."

However, how could Facebook moderate its use? If it is as readily available as the current "like" button, surely trolls will have a field day disliking anything and everything people say. Selfies would receive scores of "dislike" from people who are opposed to the notion of self-love".

The "dislike" feature could potentially cause panic and anxiety in folk who place significant value on social media. As with any new feature, it may have its downsides and we will all be the guinea pigs in this experiment to this new alternative to "like". It may help show empathy towards people going through a rough time, but so would a private message.

72. What might the word "empathy" refer to?
(A) Compassion            (B) Disagreement            (C) Intimacy            (D) Criticism
73. What is the author's attitude toward Facebook's adding of a "dislike" button?
(A) He thinks that it might increase significant value on social media.
(B) He thinks that it might give people more options to express their opinions.
(C) He thinks that it might help to connect people and love each other.
(D) He thinks that it might cause online bullying to get worse.
